Power Strategies for Parents to Support their Students in a Virtual Learning Environment

Saudi Arabian Parents and Guardians,

Whether your student is in a remote, hybrid, or face-to-face setting, you want your student to succeed. Not just succeed, but thrive. As you reflect on the last few months and the months ahead, we know that your parental influence matters. We also know how tough it can be to navigate your career, home, and student learning.

In this session, join Adam as we discuss five specific power strategies that you can do to support your learner to thrive in a virtual environment. You'll leave rejuvenated and ready to lead the charge on successful learning for your student.

Meet the Presenter: Adam Drummond, Ed.D.

A teacher, district professional, learning coordinator, university adjunct professor, and principal, I am most importantly a life-long learner. I believe that to effect the change needed for successful 21st century learning, we need to commit to growth at all levels of leadership; that means teachers, coaches, principals, and superintendents as well as students. I have spent the past 15 years building and sharing my expertise in literacy, leadership development and systemic planning with schools and districts and I am lucky to share this passion with a broader ICLE community.
